e-Discovery Veteran Adam Rubinger Joins TechLaw Solutions as Managing Director, Litigation Consulting Services

Chantilly, VA – February 5, 2009 – To address the ever increasing need for guidance and assistance interpreting the many facets of electronic discovery, Adam Rubinger has joined TechLaw Solutions to serve as the Managing Director of Consulting Services.

With the current heightened level of discovery readiness, corporations and their counsel are looking to ensure compliance and need to establish defensible, repeatable processes to effectively manage the costs, risks, and time involved in e-Discovery and litigation preparedness. This can be achieved through recommending best practices, offering creative solutions to situations that exist for corporations faced with litigation hold requests or technological limitations associated with preservation, data collection, discovery, and review.

“TechLaw Solutions consulting practice will work with clients to tailor existing technology and new ideas to provide clients with innovative and cost-effective approaches to solving their discovery related issues,” stated Mel Goldenberg, President of TechLaw Solutions. “As the challenges continue to grow in litigation, regulatory and investigative matters, Adam’s role will be to help corporations and outside counsel navigate through technical intricacies and legal standards associated with the accessibility of electronically stored information and other issues relating to electronic discovery.”

Adam brings over a decade of experience working with top corporations and law firms on large-scale electronic discovery projects and information governance, with expertise in computer forensics, electronic discovery, and IT security. He has written a number of articles as well as conducted presentations dealing with emerging technologies such as Instant Messaging, native file format production, and document preservation. Adam has consulted in numerous DOJ second requests, complex patent disputes, and many large-scale document reviews.

Adam has a JD, and a BA in Sociology, and can be reached at arubinger@techlawsolutions.com or 612-834-2000.
